Drop the Charges

Maxwell Nemadzivhanani, the chief representative of the PAC in Australia, and his partner and wife, Kerry Browning, were charged by the Australian Federal police in relation to the firebombings of South African and American diplomatic cars.

Stop the police frame-up

Maxwell and Kerry are innocent of these charges. The PAC does not engage in firebombings, which serve no political, let alone military purpose. The only people who benefit from such an attack are the South African government.

Close the racist embassy

The South African Embassy is the representative of the apartheid regime in Australia. This shows the hypocrisy of the Australian government. It publicly condemns the apartheid regime while recognising and protecting the racist South African embassy.

Coalition Against Apartheid

The coalition was formed to support Max and Kerry in fighting the frame-up. This means exerting pressure to get the charges dropped, increasing public awareness of the frame-up and raising money towards Max and Kerry's defence. As well as supporting the struggles of anti apartheid activists and organisations, the coalition also takes a stand against political repression in Australia.
